Presents

The Human Element of Surveying

Friday, November 30, 2018
Pattison Park Lodge
2228 State Route No. 50, Batavia, Ohio
(1/2 mile west of Owensville)

The Topic...

Surveying is a broad and decidedly technical field. Its practitioners, highly trained in mathematics and science, are among the most technologically savvy folks in the marketplace.

However, are we as licensed professionals, preparing the next generation of surveyors fully or merely pushing technical education at them and hoping for the best? Are we bringing forth a generation of technicians or are we connecting them to the art of surveying?

Rather than exploring the latest in drone and scanning technology or reviewing mathematical procedures, we will be looking at the oft neglected human element of surveying. What are the underlying causes of boundary disputes? How can understanding these causes make our work less stressful, easier, & even more profitable? What are our clients really asking for and are we delivering it in an unbiased and fair manner? Remember that surveyors are human too.

The Speaker:

Raymond Page is the principal of Vermont Survey Consultants, a land surveying and mapping firm located in Rutland, VT. Raymond is a graduate of Vermont Technical College in Randolph, VT and is a licensed land surveyor in both Vermont & New Hampshire. Specializing in boundary disputes and retracement surveys, he is a frequent expert witness and occasional contributor to POB Magazine.

He lives in the town of Chittenden, VT with his wife, two children, a German Shorthair Pointer, and a Red-tailed Hawk. Raymond is an avid reader, writer, and history buff, who in his spare time enjoys hunting, fishing & falconry.
